RETHINKING GLOBALIZATION

Economic nationalism, the pandemic and war have not stopped globalization, understood as world trade and exchange within so-called global value chains. They have by all means slowed it down, but the impression is that we are facing a phenomenon that is in many ways unstoppable, driven by technological progress and the revolution in information and communication technologies. Ongoing technological progress leads to an increase in demand for goods and services that are traded internationally.

However, today we are experiencing the negative effects of the fierce globalization that revolutionized the planet between the end of the last century and the beginning of the new millennium. The distributional tensions that arose from the latter often resulted in the rise of wide-scale populist movements; the expansion of international trade and widening of income gaps followed. Current geopolitical tensions can also be read as consequences of an excessively rapid globalization, which has led to the empowerment of undemocratic autocracies across the world.

This generalized resentment is fed in many countries by the idea that globalization is the result of a political choice, namely the willingness of governments to accelerate trade liberalization processes. There has certainly been a push in this direction, for example with the liberalization of trade flows with China, yet the tendency to disintegrate production processes between countries would have taken place nonetheless. Automation means an increase in trade between countries and in intermediate goods.

Oddly enough, it isn't against technological progress that people have rebelled, but rather against the globalization for which it is greatly responsible. Yet governing globalization without governing technological progress seems like a hard task to follow. It is also difficult, if not impossible, to take a step back - a return to reshoring rather than offshoring - unless the fixed costs associated with these operations are reduced. For the latter drive the concentration of economic activity in the pursuit of economies of scale and make change increasingly hard to reverse.

However, there are important political choices that need to be made on a supranational rather than national scale. These include rethinking the liberalization agenda led by the World Trade Organization and managing phenomena such as Brexit or the trade wars between China and the United States. Europe can play a far more important role than it has up to this moment.

On a national scale we need to ask ourselves how to revise social protection systems to better provide social insurance against the risks associated with globalization and changes in the labor market, finding innovative and effective ways to redistribute the resources created by globalization in a way that compensates its victims. Experiments in this direction are ongoing. Many measures have proved ineffective, but we should not give up.

From the 1st to the 4th of June 2023, Turin will become the world capital in reimagining globalization. Economists and social scientists from around the world who have studied these evolutions in depth will discuss the extent to which it is possible to temper their pace, reduce the speed induced by technological progress, strengthen multilateral institutions, reform our social protection systems and develop new business models that strengthen vertical integration instead of focusing on the disintegration of production processes.

Tito Boeri
Scientific Director

The International Festival of Economics (IFE) is born out of the collaboration between the TOLC (Turin Local Committee), coordinated by the Collegio Carlo Alberto Foundation, and Editori Laterza, the Editorial Committee and the Director, professor Tito Boeri.

In addition to the Collegio Carlo Alberto Foundation, an institute for research and advanced training in economic and social sciences, the TOLC is composed of the Region of Piedmont and the City of Turin, the Compagnia di San Paolo Foundation, the CRT Foundation, the University of Turin, the Turin Polytechnic, the Turin Chamber of Commerce, the Unioncamere Piemonte, the Unione Industriali Torino and Legacoop.

TOLC is coordinated by the Foundation Collegio Carlo Alberto.

TOLC actively participates in ensuring a meaningful and engaging experience for all participants in the IFE, an event that aims to promote dialogue and an exchange of ideas and perspectives on the future of the global economy. With the participation of distinguished speakers from within and outside the scientific community, the Festival is distinguished by its solid scientific approach, its ability to involve the community on crucial issues to understand the present and build the future and for the creation of a wide-ranging international network.

This approach is one with the mission and strategy of all Committee members, involved in protecting the common good, encouraging the growth of the area and improving the life of the collectivity. The TOLC thus acts as a collaborative network between institutions, organizations and associations that share the same goals.

Future Turin

The International Festival of Economics is a part of Future Turin, an initiative organized by the City administration to address the need for a cultural project aimed at young people and schools of all levels. The project, coordinated by the Department for Cultural Policies and the Department for Educational and Youth Policies, is founded on four major cultural festivals that make critical thinking their banner: the Democracy Biennial, the Technology Biennial, the International Festival of Economics and the Turin Book Fair. Through these events, Torino Futura intends to influence the city's major cultural events with specific actions and activities aimed at younger cohorts, creating opportunities for reflection, dialogue and civic protagonism throughout the year. This goal acknowledges the importance of offering young people opportunities for education and civic engagement that stimulate a sense of community and active citizenship.

The International Festival of Economics for university students

Students from the University of Turin and Turin Polytechnic are strongly encouraged to participate. We suggest using the university websites for information regarding the assignment of credits for those who take part in the festival, specifically in the On the Frontier, Keywords and Visions events. Updated information on these events can be found on the Festival website.

The International Festival of Economics for kids

One of the aims of the International Festival of Economics is the involvement of kids in its activities, a necessary step in promoting greater awareness of the processes of economics and finance and understanding their impact on everyday decisions.

The award ceremonies for the Econo-my and Ecoquiz competitions, which involved participants from all over Italy, will take place during the festival.

In the months leading up to the event - and under the coordination of the Compagnia di San Paolo School Foundation - a number of workshops and educational visits were planned for local primary and secondary schools in collaboration with the Bank of Italy, the Museo del Risparmio and Xké? Curiosity Lab. These institutions made their expertise and spaces available free of charge, thus offering schools a varied and entertaining program on the concepts behind a sound economic culture, the circular economy and the benefits of a more inclusive social dimension.

At the Turin headquarters of the Bank of Italy, a team game developed over the four seasons (4 Season Saving) was designed to enable primary and secondary school students to reflect on the conscious use of money, the value of saving and the need to become more aware when facing economic choices.

In the days before the Festival, the Xké? Curiosity Lab has organized activities centred around the notion of "networks in motion": the systems of circulation of people, goods, knowledge, economy, rights and opportunities in a globalized world increasingly permeated by technology and artificial intelligence.

At the Museo del Risparmio (Savings Museum), thanks to animated videos and interactive apps, boys and girls will learn about everyday actions that can help preserve the planet's resources, as well as the importance of avoiding waste and recovering objects and goods in order to give them a new life according to the principles of eco-design. With the help of experts, students from middle schools will study more complex concepts, such as inflation, energy transition and the individual's impact on the well-being of society and the environment. Guided paths aimed at high school kids will illustrate the process of transition to a more inclusive and sustainable society.

Finally, the Union of Industrialists of Turin, the Collegio Carlo Alberto Foundation and Laterza Publishing House will offer trainings and meetings with economists and representatives of the business world to raise awareness on the themes of the Festival for students in and around the city of Turin in their last three years of high school.

EUROPE, STATE AID AND GLOBAL COMPETITION

Moderator FERDINANDO GIUGLIANO

How is Europe responding to the shift of economic activity towards the Asian Continent and the U.S. government's massive business support plans for the green transition? European state aid rules have been temporarily suspended for the pandemic, but will have to be reintroduced: should they be relaxed? Or would this relaxation favor only the largest European countries, jeopardizing the Single Market? How then can we strengthen European competitiveness?

GLOBAL TRANSITIONS

The global economy is in the midst of four parallel and interacting transformations: the green transition, the shift to emerging markets and Asia in particular, the digital transformation in all its facets and the revolution in biomedical and life sciences. Added to this are an ageing population, supply-side constrained growth after a long period of deflationary forces that are fading, and major changes in labour market conditions and behaviour. What is needed to make these transformations successful and inclusive? What is the "tragedy of the commons" and how do you solve it? What is Europe's role in all this? Will these forces lead to a regime change in the global system?

GLOBALIZATION: THE POINT OF VIEW OF AN ENTREPRENEUR

by the Agnelli Foundation

Introduced by ANDREA GAVOSTO

Participants JOHN ELKANN, FABIANO SCHIVARDI

International political tensions, innovative skills and the effects of climate change are affecting companies' decisions on location, product flows and supply networks. Combining the personal experience of an entrepreneur and the analysis of an expert, this debate will examine how large Western industrial groups are responding to these challenges.

JAN EECKHOUT

DEALING WITH THE GIANTS

Introduced by ELISABETTA OTTOZ

The rise of dominant firms with extensive market power is a global phenomenon. There is momentum in policy to reign in the market power through legislative action. The European Parliament has taken the lead with two new sweeping pieces of legislation on digital industries (the Digital Markets Act and the Digital Services Act), and American policymakers are taking a close look. It remains to be seen whether lobbying by digital firms will be able to minimize the impact of this regulation, which risks lowering their monopoly profits substantially.

EUROPE AND SLOWBALIZATION

Introduced by MASSIMO GIANNINI

Despite its divisions, Europe has been able to give a common response to the pandemic and the war in Ukraine. Will it be able to play an equally important role in governing a slower but nonetheless unstoppable globalization? What space is there to offer protection to victims of globalization?

Moderator PAOLA PICA

Since the 2008-2009 financial crisis, we have been living in a "post-global" world: partial abandonment of free market rules; return of many "overly" globalized domestic industries to their homelands; challenges in implementing "green" projects. The Ukrainian conflict and Sino-US tensions are putting the international order under further stress. Will this global rift lead to a structural slowdown in growth or is it only a temporary set-back? The Report analyses some possible ways out.

LABOR AND GLOBALIZATION

Moderator NADIA CAMPANIELLO

Globalization has often been associated with the international integration of capital and goods markets. For labor markets, the link with globalization is much more delicate and complex: the laws that regulate them and the presence of intermediate bodies protecting workers vary from country to country. The risk of "downward" adjustment of labor standards and workers' rights must be avoided. What do the social and economic sciences suggest and what can be the role of supranational bodies?

GLOBALIZATION BEFORE GLOBALIZATION

Introduced by GIULIO SILVANO

Did globalization exist before the 20th Century? If so, what can this point of view tell us about our contemporary economic and political analyses? The great trade routes drawn by ancient and medieval merchants evidence the existence of an extremely vast network, proving that the maritime revolution of the modern age led to genuinely global dynamics and processes. Observing history from this perspective offers a privileged view to investigate the complexity of the present.

TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN GLOBALIZATION AND SUSTAINABILITY

Introduced by ANDREA BOITANI
Participants ANGELA BERGANTINO, CLAUDIO DE VINCENTI, PIETRO SPIRITO, ALBERTO VIANO
Moderator PAOLA PICA

Transportation of goods and people - no less than the mobility of financial capital - has been the basis of globalization and economic development over the past two centuries. On the other hand, transportation - via sea, land and air - contributes to about 22 percent of CO2 emissions and, with that, to the ongoing climate crisis. This is why transportation is a crucial and problematic element of a sustainable globalization.

Introduced by PIETRO GARIBALDI

China's emergence as a great economic power has induced an epochal shift in world trade. Beginning in the early 2000s, the entry into the WTO and the resulting sudden increase in exports put a strain on the U.S. and European manufacturing sectors, with negative effects on employment. That, in a nutshell, was the "China Shock." Twenty years later, what is the situation? Have the effects of the shock faded or do they persist?

GLOBALIZATION AND RELIGIONS

Introduced by GIULIO SILVANO

Religions, especially monotheistic ones, have always dreamed of globalizing the world and bringing it to their obedience; meanwhile, however, the world has been globalized by the economy. This has both positive and negative consequences. Among the latter is the fact that the globalized human being is dangerously on the way to downgrading from "sapiens" to "faber et consumens" (producer and consumer). On this horizon, the task of religions, and spiritualities in general, is to fight so that human beings avoid becoming "one-dimensional."

ENVIRONMENTAL CRISIS: WHAT DOES THE FUTURE HOLD FOR US?

Introduced by CHIARA PIOTTO

What are the climate risks we face in the near future? If the Paris Agreement is not adhered to, we can expect a global temperature rise of up to 5 degrees by the end of the century, plus African heat waves, desertification and drought, forest fires, floods, and a sea level rise of more than a meter. There are other risks besides global warming as well: loss of biodiversity and pollution of water, air and soil. This is the new geological era called the Anthropocene, in which the activities of eight billion humans threaten to make the planet hostile to life. The opportunity to reduce the damage still exists, but it requires a rapid and massive effort.

GLOBAL TERTIARIZATION

Introduced by ALESSANDRA COLOMBELLI

As governments and politicians desperately try to slow the decline of the local industrial sector, the global economy is increasingly dominated by the production of services rather than goods. Contrary to the past, the process of economic growth and development in poor countries is not characterized by growing industrialisation, but rather by early tertiarization. Even in China, the planet's industrial giant, there are signs of deindustrialization. But what does global tertiarization mean for the welfare, technological dynamism and inequalities of the post-industrial world? Is it possible to create a rich, just and balanced world in which industrial production is a minor activity?

CULTURAL CHANGES AND GLOBALIZATION: WHAT ARE THE IMPACTS ON FAMILY LAW?

by Consiglio Nazionale del Notariato

with ELENA LOEWENTHAL, LETIZIA MENCARINI, CHIARA SARACENO

Moderator GIULIO BIINO

As a consequence of increased comparisons with other countries and migratory flows, globalization accelerates societal transformations. The latter directly impacts Family law, which is the closest to people's daily lives. Should we revise civil law's understanding of marriage, spousal relations, parentage and inheritance in light of this increasingly small and complex world?

NEW CITIES IN A POST-GLOBAL WORLD

by the University of Turin

Participants GIUSEPPE DI GIUDA, ELENA GRANATA

The crisis we are currently experiencing has created an important opportunity for a radical rethinking of urban processes, a transition from the technocratic and financialized smart city to a city that uses technology as an enabling factor to implement fundamental rights and accessibility to essential services. In this city, new roles and challenges emerge for public and private actors.

THE YOUTH'S ODYSSEY: RISKS AND PROSPECTS OF A GLOBALIZED SOCIETY

by Associazione Allievi della Fondazione Collegio Carlo Alberto

Introduced by FRANCESCA TROMBINI

Participants CLARA MORELLI, FRANCESCO ROCCHETTI, GUIDO SARACCO

In a globalized world there is a great difference between the mobility of work and of capital. This difference also has implications for academia. How hard is it for a deserving student to access academic and internship pathways abroad and what can be done to mitigate these challenges in this context?

Moderator PAOLO GRISERI

In an uncertain political scenario characterized by systemic risks, investments in innovative and sustainable infrastructures represent a powerful vehicle for change, contributing to address the most important economic, environmental and societal challenges of our time. Sustainable infrastructure, on top of being an opportunity for financial actors, is characterized by its high impact on the growth of communities and the places they live in.

WHICH WILL WIN?

Introduced by LINO SAU

Globalization of the 1990s and 2000s seems like a distant memory as countries now turn inward due to the Covid pandemic, the Trump trade war with China, and Russia's invasion of Ukraine. What are the prospects for global integration in this new era of economic nationalism?

WHERE DOES THE SUPPORT FOR PROTECTIONISM COME FROM? IMPLICATIONS FOR EMERGING ECONOMIES

Introduced by MARCO SANFILIPPO

The economic impact of globalization has been a central issue commanding the attention of policymakers. Recently, worries over how openness to trade affects jobs and wages have intensified and sowed the seeds for a backlash against globalization, particularly in developed countries. What are the implications of this, in particular for developing countries?

GEOPOLITICS OF DIGITAL PLATFORMS' REGULATION

Introduced by ELISA LUCIANO

Network externalities tend to make many digital platforms into oligopolies, if not monopolies, not just within a country but across countries. Regulation, thus, would require international coordination. Yet, this coordination is made difficult by strategic reasons: digital platforms accumulate data that favor the countries where these companies are located. What role should the EU play in this complicated game?

The Russian invasion of Ukraine has brought the link between war and international trade back into the spotlight. For some, it calls into question the pacifying effect of globalization. For others, the trade sanctions against Russia, by increasing the cost of war for Russia, could encourage Putin to change his strategy and push him to negotiate. What are the complex links between war and trade, both in the present context and in an historical perspective?

ENERGY AND GLOBAL CRISIS

by Regione Piemonte

Introduced by ANDREA TRONZANO

Participants ALBERTO ANFOSSI, STEFANO BUONO, VALERIA TERMINI

The global crisis of 2022 began with an energy crisis. Yet different areas across the world are not similarly equipped with regards to the availability of traditional and sustainable energy resources. For European economies, which are particularly exposed to these kinds of shocks, should we hope for a future with new energy resources?
